THE PREFACE.

THE PREFACE.

For illustrating the early trade of Scotland, there are brought together in this volume our oldest extant Ledger or merchant's account-book, and the earliest complete Tariff of Customs.

The book of accounts of Andrew Halyburton has Halyburton's been in the General Register House at Edinburgh for a long time. It is found in the Inventories of the House made up in 1701, where it is placed under the head of 'Promiscuous Account Books,' and described as 'a large and very old book, of what nature unknown.' But on the copy of that inventory made in 1727, a modern hand has added the dates—'3 Aug. 1493 to 1503,' which sufficiently identify our Ledger.

It is a thick folio of 16 by $11\frac{1}{2}$ inches, in its The book original dark leather binding, the back strengthened with bands and parchment thongs, very much in the style of modern account-books. The boards are covered with stamps and tooling of the binder's art; but I cannot say whether usual or appropriate to the mercantile account-book of Flanders of that age. Dragons and wyverns may be local workman's hand, while the two-headed eagle, crowned, marked everywhere the dignity of Imperial Germany.

Round the edges of the binding runs a pretty scroll of foliage, not unworthy of imitation, and which is represented at the top of this Preface.

The Ledger contains about 300 leaves—of which only 261 written upon—of a stout cotton paper, 15 by 11 inches, with the water-mark so frequent in the Netherlands; but the common account of which—that it is the initial, and put for the name, of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy—is not very satisfactory. When I first examined the book, in investigating the history of our early trade, some twenty-five years ago, I found in it two or three scraps of written paper, some of them attached to the leaves of the ledger by coarse and much verdigrised pins.

One piece of thick brown paper seems to have Fragments stood for a blotting-leaf, for the writer had not used the ledger. the French fashion of drying his writing with sand or dust. This blotting-leaf also has a water-mark, which may give some light to students of that manufacture.

The other scraps of writing, now all unattached, consist of such memorandums and ephemeral documents as are to be looked for. We find, for instance, a letter addressed to the owner of the book, by a correspondent, Philip Gualterotti, of Bruges. It is in French, and with the license of spelling in which French writers then indulged, while there is a quaint turn of expression which may, perhaps, be thought to mark the Italian original of the writer, no doubt one of those merchants and bankers of Venice or of Lombardy, drawn by the growing trade to settle in the great emporium of the Netherlands. The letter is addressed—

A tres honoure Sire Messire Andris Aliberton, conservateur de la Nasion des Eschosoys a Midelburg.

Memorandum of money found in the purse of John of Carkettel.

Then we have a memorandum of the money found in the purse of John of Carkettel, a cousin of Halyburton's, who made his will, and perhaps died, in his house. It is printed [within brackets] at p. 51. Next, we find a draft of a friendly letter and invoice of goods sent by the Conservator to a Scotch correspondent:—

And lastly, there occur some forms of procedure used in the court of the Conservator, which have been preserved as styles, but, I fear, had reference to a dispute with James Cumming, a partner of some of Halyburton's ventures:—

Almost the whole book is in Halyburton's own Mode of hand. He is a careless scribe, satisfied if his letters accounting indicate what he means. In spelling, he mixes a little Flemish and Dutch with his native Scotch. The numeration both of goods and of money is for the most part in the modern or Arabic numerals. But these were only a late acquisition of the writer, who uses them very rudely, and often reverts to the Roman i., v., x. Each account is solemnly preceded by the name of 'Jhesus,' a practice not uncommon amongst writers of lay as well as church books. I have thought it worth while to represent on my margins, the 'merchants' marks' of the correspondents, where these are noted. The money, where not otherwise expressed, is the common currency of the Netherlands, sometimes marked by the sign gf.; and counted in pounds, shillings, and groats,—li. š. gf.1

The period of the book an

the public and political historian, it may serve merely to fix in the memory the time embraced by the book an eventful decade, our merchant's book, if I say, in the words of Hallam, that 'this period of ten years—1490-1500 will ever be memorable in the history of mankind. It is here that we usually close the long interval between the Roman world, and this our modern Europe, denominated the Middle Ages. quest of Granada, which rendered Spain a Christian kingdom; the annexation of the last great fief of the French crown, Brittany, which made France an entire and absolute monarchy; the public peace of Germany; the invasion of Naples by Charles VIII. which revealed the weakness of Italy, while it communicated her arts and manners to the Cisalpine nations; the discovery of two worlds by Columbus and Vasco de Gama, all belong to this decade.'2

In the decade so full of European interest, Flanders was the very centre of it. Maximilian of Austria. taking these rich provinces as the dower of Mary of Burgundy, his wife, behaved towards them with the policy of his race. Setting the burghers against the nobles, and the nobles against the cities, debasing the coin, insulting customary and chartered privileges, he had almost stamped out the freedom of the freest people in Europe, and much injured their trade, when, in 1493, he succeeded to the Imperial throne, and handed over the Netherlands to his son Philip the Fair, who at seventeen years of age received the homage of these Provinces.

It was a gloomy prospect for the free provinces, when, in 1496, Philip married Joanna, daughter of Frederick and Isabella; from which marriage, in 1501, was born Charles v., inheriting the double power of his parents, with greater abilities, and all Freedom and their hatred of freedom, whether in politics or reli-but not extingious opinions. But providentially, freedom, and its companion commerce, once planted, are not easily rooted out; and all the might of the Empire, with Spain and the Indies, failed to impose the Inquisition upon Flanders, or to quell the Dutch spirit of trade.

Our own Scotland in that time enjoyed one of Scotland under its brief periods of quiet and of national prosperity. Notwithstanding the little episode of Perkin Warbeck, James IV. kept on good terms with England, and at length seemed to 'take a bond of Fate,' by his marriage with Margaret Tudor. Under the most accomplished of the Stuart princes, the country made progress which showed itself in enlightened legislation, in learning and literature, as well as in commercial activity. It was in the beginning of this period that Bishop Elphinstone founded the University beside his flourishing commercial burgh of Aberdeen. It was scarcely past the end of it, that our first printing-press was set up, and the wonderful efforts were made in printing, which, like those of Aldus and the Italian masters, throw later work into the shade. Scotland was in her best attire. and it was in the Court of James IV. that Ariosto found subjects for his romantic admiration, and where poets rivalling Chaucer—I mean Dunbar. Douglas, Henryson—sung, and were appreciated.

Of the owner of the Ledger.

Of Andrew Halvburton, the owner and chief writer of the Ledger, and whose trade for ten years it records, I can give no account, except what its pages furnish. It is a good old Scotch name, and many of that surname bore the Christian name of Andrew: but whether our Flanders merchant was of the Halyburtons of that ilk, of Dirleton in Lothian, or of the family of Pitcur in Angus, I cannot deter-I can tell nothing of him and his life and actions, except what is told in the leaves now printed; and the personal acquaintance derived from that source is wonderfully scanty. Whether of gentle birth or no, his relatives and connexions seem to have been of his own rank in life, merchant-burgesses of Scotch towns.2

-Or, on a bend Azure, three Mosman (27). Tailyefer and Mosman are both names of old burgess families of Edinburgh. ketil (p. 51) one of a family of Homyl is called Halyburton's brother-by marriage we must suppose. I think he wasan Aberdonian.

The noble with us, when he sought to better his fortunes by commerce, was not required to give up his sword in the face of his brother nobles—to be reclaimed when he had renounced the gainful call-I suppose we inherited from our Teutonic fathers some of the feeling which made so curious a mixture of soldier and trader, merchant-seaman and pirate in the old rovers of the North—the same spirit that survived in 'Cnut the opulent' of Berwick, of the thirteenth century, and among the munificent citizens of Roxburghe, while it was still a city. From our earliest records, burghs and burgesses were held in respect and honour, and their trade encouraged and protected. They throve under such institutions, and in a country so poor as Scotland the trading element was soon powerful and influential.

Here, however, and I believe in England also, the In Scotland traders easily union of trade was only an accident of nobility. entered the Our rich burgesses of Edinburgh and Aberdeen did not found houses taking pride in their trading origin, and continuing their ancestral trade and their connexion with their parent city. The names of our early burgesses, and such memorials as remain of their history, prove many to have been of good families, often noble. Foreigners from the Netherlands are found in high honour in Aberdeen in the fourteenth century, and many charter-chests of our own landed families show accessions of wealth and treasures of foreign art and luxury that must have come from the young merchant adventurers of the house. when these Scotch gentlemen had realized the moderate fortune which in those days enabled them to become 'landed men,' they found no impediment to their reception among their brother lairds, and left the burgh behind them, only perhaps keeping up a neighbourly friendship, which made the Bannermans and Menzieses so often Provosts of Aberdeen, the Charters's of Perth, and the Prestons of Edinburgh.

Many landed families owe their origin to trade. In commercial communities so connected with the landed gentry, it was an easy thing for any burgess, even of pure burgess blood and rearing, to pass, when fortune smiled on his merchandise, into the landed class, to become laird and 'baron;' and many Scotch landed families of high standing, and now quite unaware of it, owe their origin to successful trade.

They had the same freedom,—for nobility never in Britain conferred the odious privilege of exemption from public taxes. They intermarried without disparagement.¹ We had the old Teutonic traditions of birth and gentry, but the 'sullen line of demarcation,'2 which in other countries of Europe separated the two orders as effectually as the caste of Bengal, was unknown here; and so it has come to pass that, in all the convulsions of a much disturbed society, in the constant strife of opinions, in the civil wars of religion and political faction, we have escaped the greatest of national evils—the separation and opposition of orders, the deadly war of the rich against the poor, the educated against the ignorant.

Lodovico Guicciardini, writing in the middle of the sixteenth century, praises its admirable situation, its two ports, Ramua and Sclusa; its two canals, one lately made, broad and deep and straight, by which great ships of more than 200 tons can pass and repass from Ramua to Middleburgh to the great profit and pleasure of the inhabitants. He boasts of its defences, too necessary in those times.—its excellent double wall, the broad and deep ditches, which made it a very strong place. At a league distance, at the other end of its canal, he notices Vere, or Camp Vere, a pretty place, he says, and with moderate traffic, chiefly by ships from Scotland, which there for the most part take harbour.2 Another writer, somewhat later, speaks of Wal-

Even in Halyburton's time Antwerp was the foremost city of the Netherlands; and half a century afterwards, the Florentine whom I have already quoted, luxuriates in the description of its universal commerce. Trade of Antwerp portant merchandises which daily come and go to and from all parts of Europe by sea and land. Giving precedence to his own country as befits a noble Florentine, he tells us that—with Italy: Imports.

From Italy much of the merchandise came by land, but we are not told the route. From Rome was brought little of consequence, but thither were sent cloths of many kinds, tapestries, and many From Ancona is sent an incredible other goods. quantity of camlets, grograms, mohair of many sorts, spices, drugs, silks, cottons, felts, carpets, Cordovan leather, indigo, all which are merchandises from the East. Thither, again, goes a vast quantity of cloths of English and of Netherland manufacture, and tapestry, and also the crimson dye called cochineal, which comes from Spain, to a considerable value. From Bologna was brought silk in all shapes, woven, spun, and raw, and cloths of gold and silver; and in return were taken woollen cloths, much 'mercery,' and the tapestry for which the looms of Arras and all Flanders were renowned.

Venice sends to these northern shores, spices from Asia, plenty of drugs; not only rhubarb, aloes, and senna-leaves, but dragons' blood, mummy, mithridate, and other antidotes against poison and pestilence, all from the East.

Of old, Venice sent her Eastern commodities by sea; and five Venetian galleys came to the fairs of Flanders, laden with drugs and spices; but all that commerce has now been cut off by the King of Portugal, and the Venice merchants must send by land their stuffs of silk, excellent for beauty and richness, their carpets, splendid scarlet cloths, silks raw and dressed, cottons, ebony, indigo, and other dyes; and they take back jewels and much pearls, Imports. cloths and wools of England, though of this latter much is now carried by sea direct, native stuffs of Honscot, Lille, Arras, Valenciennes, Mons, tapestry and merceries of all sorts, crimson dye (il color chermisi) to a great value, household furniture in great quantity, often sugars, and sometimes even pepper.

From the Kingdom of Naples came silks of all sorts, some peltry, the saffron of Aquila, and excellent manna; the returns being the same as to Venice.

From Sicily, by land and sea, was brought a great quantity of cottons and silks, and some sorts of strong white wine, as Vernaccia and others, in exchange for immense quantities of cloths and woollen stuffs, tapestries, and metal goods.

From Milan and its territory they brought gold and silver thread to a great value, cloths of silk and gold of many kinds, an infinity of fustians, scarlet 'stametts,' and other fine cloths, a quantity of good rice, excellent armours, merceries of many sorts, even Parmesan cheese; and took back pepper and Imports. sugar, jewels and perfumes, the unfailing cloths and tapestries, crimson dye, and also wools of England and Spain.

The peculiar commodities of Florence are cloths of gold and silver, with the nap, or shorn, brocades and other stuffs of silk, rich and beautiful, some furs, and many fine wares of ornamental art (gentilezze di lavori fini).

From Genoa come a marvellous quantity of the highest priced velvets, the best that are made anywhere, with other sorts of cloth; and thence comes coral; and again, the excellent antidotes against poison. Mantua, Lucca, Verona, Brescia, Vicenza, Modena, dealt in the same commodities as the rest of Italy. Besides these commodities, mostly landborne, came by sea, the alums of Civita Vecchia, the oils of Apulia, of Genoa, and of Pisa, sulphur and orpiment, and other heavy merchandise; and the same ships took back tin and lead, madder and Brazil wood, wax, hides, linens, tallow, salt fish, some ornamental woods, sometimes also wheat, rye, and beans; the mixed produce, it will be observed, of the North, and of Spain with its new world.

With Germany.

From Germany came silver and quicksilver, copper in incredible quantity, the excellent wools of Hesse, glass, dye-stuffs, saltpetre, household furniture, arms and armour of every sort and price. The white wines of the Rhine, excellent in taste, and best for health and digestion, with the peculiar quality that you can drink twice as much of them as of other wine, without hurting head or stomach.

North, there came by sea to Antwerp an inestimable quantity of goods, corn, copper, saltpetre, woad, vitriol (vetrivolo), madder, excellent wool of Austria. lint, honey, wax, sulphur, ashes of merchandise, the finest furs of all sorts, sable, martin, ermine vair, lynx, leopard, polecat, beautiful white foxes, and the common fox, white and common wolves, and fish skins of many kinds. Then hides of all sorts of beasts, especially buffalo, ornamental woods, and timber for ship-building; especially a sort called wainscot (waghescot), truly beautiful, and variegated like the walnut, which is here much in use for a thousand works, and is even sent into Italy. We must not forget flesh and fish, salted, smoked, dried in the sun or wind; but above all, that mysterious substance Amber, which is called of Dantzig, but which comes from a hundred miles beyond; sovereign it is in medicine against all sorts of fever; besides other marvellous qualities. With France : Imports.

From France they bring by sea salt sali de Bruaggio ?] in immense quantity, woad from Toulouse in a large quantity and of good quality; a great value of canvas and other coarse stuffs from Brittany and Normandy; wines red and white, of many districts, good, wholesome and nutritious, oils, saffron, the corn of Provence, molasses or marmalades (melazzi), turpentine, wax, writing-papers of different sorts and of different places to a great amount, glasses, dried plums, Brazil wood, which the French go with much peril to cut upon that coast of America called Brazil from that wood. By land they bring many finely wrought gildings, very fine cloth from Paris and Rouen, light cloths from Tours, the buntings of Champagne, thread, probably silk-yarn, from Lyons, hemp, verdigris of excellent quality from Montpelier, and great value of other wares from different parts of the country. In return they send into France jewels, pearls, silver, quicksilver, copper, bronze, brass, tin, lead, vermilion, indigo, crimson, sulphur, saltpetre, and vitriol, camlets, grograms, mohairs, cloths of England of many sorts and names, and cloth and fine fabrics of Flanders to an immense value; Austrian peltry, hides, wax, madder, tallow, dried meat, and much salt fish.

Exports.

Spain : Imports.

From Spain were brought innumerable kinds of merchandise; jewels and pearls, which the Spaniards bring from their Western Indies and New World;

the pearls large and fine, but not so perfect as the Oriental; great quantities of gold and silver, pure, which also they bring chiefly from that new and happy world; so also the crimson dye called cochineal and the roots of sarsaparilla. From Old Spain, saffron, some drugs, much raw silk and stuffs of silk, especially the velvets of Toledo, and taffety, salt, alum of Mazzeron, excellent wools, iron, Cordovan leather and morocco, white wines of many kinds, as Bastards and Romanés, and other kinds good and wholesome, fruits, dried and fresh, sugars from the Canaries, those islands which the ancients called the Fortunate Isles. To Spain they send quicksilver, cloths of Flanders and England, tapes-Exports. tries, fine and coarse fabrics of cloth to an immense value, camlets, grograms, mohairs, lint, yarn, wax, madder, tallow, sulphur, and often corn, salt fish, cheese, butter, merceries of all metals, of silk, of silkworms, for an incredible value, a good deal of plate, many arms and armour, and all munitions of war, and household furniture; in short, Spain is furnished from these countries of everything of which they have daily manufacture, and which requires industry and man's labour, for of these the Spaniards, in their own country at least, are most intolerant.

As Spain pours in the produce of her Western Portugal: world, Portugal brings from the East, and from Africa, jewels and perfect orient pearls, gold in ingots and leaf, spices, drugs, amber, musk, civet, ivory, that is, elephants' teeth, in large quantity, rhubarb, aloes, indigo, called by the Portuguese anil, cotton, China root, and other precious articles, which the Portuguese bring from the Eastern Indies, from Calicut first to Lisbon and then every day hither; hither also they bring sugars from the Island of Saint Thomas, placed right under the equinoctial line, wood of Brazil, wine of Madeira brought from that island, and so excellent that it may pass for Malvoisie, and from their own country, salt, wine, oil, woad, grain, raisins, morocco leather, and such a quantity of fruit of all sorts, fresh and dry, comfitted and conserved as to produce a large sum. In return, they take the same commodities with Spain.

Barbary.

From Barbary in Africa they bring sugar, indigo, gums, coloquintida, skins, furs, and most beautiful feathers of many sorts; and they send in return cloths, says, and thinner fabrics, and an immense quantity of merceries, of metals and other kinds.

England: Imports. From England came cloths of all sorts, fine and coarse, to an immense value, the finest wools, the best saffron, but in small quantities, tin and lead to a great value, an immense quantity of skins of sheep and rabbits, and some other peltry of the country, some hides, beer, cheese, Malvoisie wine, brought yearly by sea from Candia.

Scotland: Imports. From Scotland they bring a great quantity of sheep-skins and rabbit-skins, and much other fine peltry of different little beasts, but especially martenskins, the most beautiful that are found anywhere; they bring many hides, some wool, some cloths, ill-made; and moreover, large pearls, but not of so good water and colour as the Eastern, nor nearly of such value. Into Scotland, because the people are Exports. poor, and because they are supplied for the most part from England and France, no great quantity of goods is sent from Antwerp, only some spices, some sugars, madder, some stuffs of silk, camlets, grograms, and mohairs, serges of different kinds, and mercers' wares.

Thus, for the decade of our book, and for the half century following, the trade and manufacture of the world, circled round and centred in the busy hive of Antwerp and the Low Countries. I have thought that the enumeration of commodities, tedious and oft-repeated as they are, helped to show this. If I could give even an approximate statement of the quantity and value of these commodities, my purpose would be served. But this, which must have been difficult at first, is impossible after the lapse of time and the change in the value of money. The author, whom I have been following, estimates the value of the imports value of imfrom Italy into Antwerp alone, at the average of three millions of crowns (scudi) yearly.

The Rhine wine alone from Germany, estimated Rhine wine. at forty thousand casks, at thirty-six crowns the cask, comes to a million and a half of crowns. More than a million and a half crowns are estimated as the value of the annual importation from the North.

Imports from France. France is set down as sending forty thousand casks of wine, which, counting one with another, at twenty-five crowns, gives a million of crowns per annum. Woad from France is to the value of three hundred thousand crowns, and salt a hundred and eighty thousand.

From Spain.

Spain, he says, used to send to Bruges more than forty thousand sacks of wool, but having, of late years, begun to make much more cloth at home, she does not send at this present time (1560) more than twenty-five thousand, which, estimated at twenty-five crowns the sack, amount to six hundred and twenty thousand crowns. The wine of Spain gives about as much.

From Portngal. Portuguese imports to Antwerp were above a million crowns yearly.

England.

Barbary, and passed by as of too little importance to be mentioned in this calculation, Guicciardini passes next to England. The wools of that country, which once had their staple at Calais but now at Bruges, exceed twelve hundred serplaths, estimated at two hundred and fifty thousand crowns annually. But the quantity of cloths which come from that realm to this province is a marvellous thing, and amounts to two hundred thousand pieces of cloth, worth, one with another, twenty-five crowns the piece, giving the sum of price, five millions of gold by the year, all of which is invested in other merchandise for returns. 'On the whole,' says this writer.

Scotland and Ireland placed in the same class with Import and export.

'considering and well calculating such a traffic, I find that between giving and receiving, the trade between England and the Low Countries reaches yearly—who could believe it! to twelve millions of crowns, with such advantage and profit of both countries, that scarce can one exist without the other.' 1

Guicciardini would have us to believe that the greatness of Antwerp was chiefly owing to two causes: (1.) Its two great fairs; that of Whitsuntide, and the other of St. Remigius, called also the Fair of St. Balbo, each of which fairs lasts for six weeks, and which were no doubt, in his day, the greatest mercantile assemblages in Europe. (2.) The second cause I will give in his own words. The movement which has made this city so great, rich, and famous, began about the year 1503-4, when the Portuguese having, a little before, with maryellous and stupendous navigation and appliances, taken possession of Calicut, and made an agreement with its king, began to bring the spices and the drugs of India into Portugal (a voyage of sixteen thousand miles,

1 This writer, without the sagacity of his uncle, the historian of Italy, has the advantage of writing on the spot, and would seem to have been engaged in trade himself, probably the Italian trade. He mentions, amongst other great improvements in commerce, the equalizing and dividing risks of ships at sea by mutual assurance among merchants. Though this is an early notice of it, insurance against sea-risks must have been well known before this time in Spain and the Netherlands, and even in England. It was in 1556 that Bacon took an illustration from mutual assurance—'Doth not the wise merchant, in every adventure of danger, give part to have the rest assured!'

which is ordinarily performed in six months), and from Portugal to the fairs at Antwerp. Now, these spices and drugs used before to go by way of the Red Sea to Beyrout and Alexandria, and thence were carried by the Venetians to Venice, and through all Italy, through France, through Germany, and all the provinces of Christendom. Our author tells us that the Fuggers and Welzers, and other German merchants, soon took up the trade brought by the Portuguese to Antwerp, but the people of Germany, ignorant of this new voyage of the Portuguese, were much astonished at first, and doubted the genuineness of the commodities. This change brought much of the trade that had formerly centred in Bruges to Antwerp, and with it came many of the honoured trading houses of Spain, and first the Gualterotti, the Buonvisi, and the Spinoli, all houses of great following and very large trade.

Scotch trade.

I cannot bring facts to contradict the rather contemptuous account of Scotch trade given by the Florentine. Our country was poor in soil and climate; and internal dissension and continual jealousy or strife with England withdrew the care, industry, and capital that should have developed her products as well as her trade. Of such trade as there was, Halyburton seems to have had his share, and the position which he occupied as Conservator of the privileges of his nation, marks him as a leading merchant, and probably the chief of the Factors of the Scotch Staple.

In a collection like the present, intended chiefly for illustrating the early trade of Scotland, I may be permitted to look back to the commencement of it, without pretending to give more than an outline of what our records afford.

Almost as early as we can trace any settled government or civilisation in Scotland, we have proofs of the esteem in which commercial industry and enterprise were held among us.

We may think Ailred's praise of the saintly King In the time of David exaggerated, as well as his picture of Scotland under his dominion—' no longer the beggar from other countries, but of her abundance relieving the wants of neighbours—adorned with castles and cities, her ports filled with foreign merchandise and the riches of distant nations.' Yet the historian was a contemporary and eye-witness, and some traits of the King's manner of life which drop from his pen accidentally, serve to prove, more than his poetical description, the prosperity of trade and David's consideration for merchants.¹

seed-time and harvest, at other seasons ploughing the sea, and reaping a harvest of trade or of plunder, as fortune led. We moderns do not scruple to call them pirates.

In the year that Earl Rognvald returned from the east (1153), Swein Asleifa's son, a great Ork-

In the reign of Edgar, in David's own reign, and much more in the time of his grandsons, William and Malcolm, and of the two Alexanders, the customs of foreign merchandise arriving at the ports of Scotland were a reliable source of the royal revenue, and often formed the fund from which the sovereign endowed his religious foundations, as well as a fund of credit for national loans.1

Swein, however, escaped without the king's intervention, and in his turn sent messengers to the King of Scots to tell his adventures. The messengers met on the road, and all returned to the King at Edinburgh, who made light of the loss of his subjects, and sent Swein a fine shield and more good gifts. -Orkn, Saga, pp. 344-346.

Scot. p. 17. Berwick was then the greatest port on the east coast, after London, and our chroniclers describe its trade and wealth and splendour only in too florid language. I have pointed out the information regarding the early trade of Scotland to be found in the very curious tariffs reaching back quite to the time of David I., in a selection of lectures which I printed under the title of Scotland in the Middle Ages (p. 236), and do not think it necessary to repeat the reference.

and manufacture; and the consolidation of that remarkable code of burghal law, the real and proud distinction of Scotland which our foolish forefathers sought to draw from the borrowed plumes of the Regiam Majestatem.

I must not be held to limit the commencement of Rise of the trade to the foundation of burghs; but commerce and burghs. all moveable property were very precarious in Scotland till David gave them security, by encouraging and directing the spirit of combination that distinguishes our race, and furnishing the material safeguard of the King's castle and its garrison, as well as the moral support of the law for trade and traders. He protected his burghers—and encouraged them to protect themselves-not only against robbers and pirates from without, but against the upland man, the marauding baron, or the lawless leader of catherans, who was but too ready to turn from his everlasting war with his fierce neighbours of the glen to pillage or 'sorn' upon the peaceful men of trade, whom fortune seemed to have put in his hands as sheep to be shorn, till the great legislator came to their aid.

Let me guard against being thought to have The first, that of dating all Antiquity of burghal fallen into two errors. our Scotch burgh institutions as not earlier than institutions. institutions which it seemed to create. We had. our little 'Hanse' of Scotch traders long before the same phrase was adopted for the great European union of the Hanse Towns; but the burghal spirit was awake over all Europe in those centuries, and it produced a freemasonry in feeling, and a uniformity even in forms of self-government, from Barcelona and Leon to Inverness and Novgorod. The spirit was most active perhaps in Italy and Spain, but the consuls and prudhommes in Southern France, the maires and échevins in the Langue d'oil, the schout and schepens of the Low Country cities, and many another name of magistrature, hardly ' differ in essentials from our own alderman, provost, bailies, and councillors. Unfortunately, the form and show of burghal usages, in most countries, survived the free institutions, which made them respectable.2 Our country has been more fortunate,

² Augustin Thierry, the most zealous lover of the Tiers Etat, tells us how, after all their great power and independence were gone, the French towns still clung to the shadow of burghal government. A letter of Racine I cannot resist quoting after

It is written from Uzès. in Provence, in 1664, when the system of Richelieu, followed out by Louis xIV., had extinguished burghal independence :-- 'De quoi voulez vous que je vous entretienne? De vous dire qu'il fait ici le plus beau temps du monde! vous ne vous en mettez guère en peine; de vous dire qu'on doit cette semaine créer des Consuls, ou Conses comme on dit! cela yous touche fort peu. Cependant c'est une belle chose de voir le compère cardeur et le menuisier gaillard. avec la robe rouge comme un président, donner des arrêts, et aller for, while we have kept all that was still valuable, our artisans and burgesses have abandoned the monopolies which the progress of society and law rendered no longer a public good.¹

I need not point out that through all that burghal Exclusive legislation, whether specific or general, runs the traders. jealous, exclusive spirit, which offends the modern merchant and the politician well read in Adam Smith. Freedom of trade, protection for honest industry, was not enough. Every privilege granted to individuals or corporations, to be valued, must be accompanied by prohibition of rivals. This is seen in the code of the burgh laws, but much more in charters to some of our older burghs, as Perth, Aberdeen, Inverness, Ayr. The burgh was the only place free to manufacture or to sell—privileged to les premiers à l'offrande; vous ne voyez pas cela à Paris.'—Tableau de l'ancienne France Municipale, p. 244.

¹ We cannot shut our eyes to the aristocratic element that runs through the early burgh institutions, as it does indeed quite manifestly through the whole early organizing of our existing society. The 'rights of man'-the 'natural equality of men'-was an afterthought, worked out by the reasoning of philosophers, but not dreamt of in the time when the elements of society are seen emerging out of confusion, and taking their form and place. In rural districts this element soon took the shape of a feudal aristocracy,

-the lords of the soil. In towns an analogous distinction gave to merchants-the riccos hombres of the society, the same superiority over the mechanic and artisan which the knight and noble had over the ceorl and the serf. It is pleasant to trace these distinctions downwards-to see the armed chivalry of the feudal ages subsiding into the class which is only distinguished by its consciousness of gentle birth and the manners which befit it; while the jealous and contemptuous exclusiveness of the merchant of our old burghs has toned down into that self-respect which our writers of last century liked to connect with the name of the 'British merchant.'

brew ale or to tap wine, to make cloth or to sell it, within a wide geographical boundary. Within the burgh itself, only the members of the 'crafts' might carry on the little manufacture known then; only the merchant burgess, the proud member of the merchant guild, was free to deal in merchandise in the smallest way of retail, as well as in greater dealings and over-sea trading voyages. The merchant burgess directed all the penalties of the law against the unfree trader—just as in another department the Church gave forth its anathema against schoolmasters poaching in her privileged manor of education.1 But this was not all, the brother of the merchant guild—qilda mercatoria—was of another clay from a man of a craft, a plebeian that worked with his own hand! The burgess of a royal burgh might 'have battle'-might claim the right of duel -against burgess, abbot, prior, earl, or baron.² But that was only for merchant burgesses. No craftsman need hope for such honour. A craftsman who aspires to the privilege of the merchants' guild must first forswear working with his own hand.3 It is clear the weaver and dyer were of no high consideration, nor even held worthy of encouragement. I think the line of demarcation between the merchant burgess and the craftsman or mechanic, though not impassable, was broader than that which separated the merchant from the landed man.

The burghal institutions, however, were suited to their time. It was much to have a steady centre for security of life, property, trade, manufacture, against a turbulent, lawless population without, and with that protection, vigorous and still gaining strength, trade continued to thrive.

dwelling on the fatal event, the death of Alexander III., which had befallen just a century before his own birth, relates the good King's care in administering justice through his dominions; his war against idle beggars and the extravagant retinues of nobles, and finally his protection of merchants and merchandise. Trade had been impeded and the kingdom impoverished, he says, by the depredations of pirates, the losses by shipwreck and arrestments used on slight ground. Unluckily the historian, never very logical or consecutive, does not describe the remedial measures adopted. But he assures us that, within a year after they were used, ships of diverse regions came to this country laden with various merchandise, to be exchanged for our own produce. And so it was provided, says the chronicler, that none but burgesses should meddle with such transactions. By which means within few years the kingdom abounded in all goods as well in victuals as money, cattle and sheep, merchandises and trades, so that many from the east, and from the west, and from the ends of the earth, came to witness the justice, the policy, the power and wisdom of the King. praise, borrowed from Solomon, is supported by one statement which may have been true. Justice, says Bower, was so well administered through the land, that Lombards of great wealth (et ditissimi Lumbardi) came in numbers and offered to the King to build for themselves royal cities (regales civitates) at such places as the fine roadstead of St. Margaret's Hope, or the Isle of Cramond, provided they had certain privileges granted them —for they too relied on the protection of exclusive privileges.1 Their petition did not please some of the estates, but Bower intimates that it would have been successful, if the wise and good King had not died so suddenly.

Upon Alexander's death ensued the evils of the disputed succession, the deadly civil war, the inter-arisen in the Low Countries. It is scarcely worth while speculating on the meaning of the Abbot of Inchcolme, and perhaps a Porson would cut the knot by suggesting to read specialibus for spiritualibus.—Goodall's Fordun, vol. ii. pp. 128-130.

¹ Bower oddly says they desired spiritual privileges (spiritualibus quibusdam privilegis). What spiritual freedom the Lombard merchants could desire beyond the Scotch canon, it is difficult to imagine. The dread of the Inquisition had not yet

But the deadly hatred of the Scots, the hatred and contempt of the English, were Edward's doing, and they put a stop to all beneficial commerce between the two countries for centuries.

When Scotland had time for breath, after Bannockburn, the vigorous and enlightened rule of Bruce again gave us a fitful gleam of national and commercial prosperity. Foreign trade and traders were encouraged, and Scotch merchants began to trust to their own ships. The King was a sailor in a small way himself, and spent his short leisure of latter life in cruising with a mimic fleet on the firths and inland seas of the west coast. Under David II. and the early Stewarts, Scotland relapsed into anarchy, and trade almost expired. James I. made vigorous efforts to restore civilisation at home, and foreign trade slowly and feebly revived along with it. James 1v. had the pursuits, and some of the character, of his great ancestor, Robert Bruce.

Staple in the Netherlands. The trade between Flanders and Scotland, of immemorial antiquity, was not of old restricted to any one port or staple.

In the beginning of the fifteenth century, Bruges was the recognised Staple of the Scotch trade in the Netherlands, as it still was the grand emporium where many currents of commerce intersected and centred. In 1444, in consequence of the marriage of Mary of Scotland to Wolfred, Lord of Camp Vere (to whom she brought the Earldom of Buchan), the Staple was changed to his State; and although the Lords of Camp Vere did not descend from that thither on mules and waggons their spices and other goods, which they had landed at the mouths of the Rhone. These Venetians dwelt long at Limoges, and from thence, as from a centre, sent their merchandise 'to Rochelle, Brittany, England, Scotland, and Ireland.' I quote from M. Violletle-Duc (Architecture, vol. i. p. 137), whose statement of facts is not to be questioned, and here he quotes his authority carefully, which, however, I have not thought it necessary to refer to. If the 'old records' quoted do mention the settlement of the Venetian colony at Limoges, which I have no interest to question, I am satisfied that, in enumerating our islands amongst the countries to which they pushed their trading adventures, they wanted merely to express places incredibly distant, and known only through the mist of fable.

marriage, the Staple continued there until 1539, when it was removed to Antwerp, and two years later to Middleburgh; but it soon returned to Camp Vere, and it remained, with short interruptions, at that port down to the French Revolution; so that the Conservator of Scotch privileges, who was a con-Conservator of sul, only with more defined powers, and with an ex-leges. tensive jurisdiction over Scotch subjects and in all disputes between Scotsmen, was commonly called the Conservator of Camp Vere.¹

We must not expect to know much of the trading Halyburton's correspondents of a merchant three hundred and correspondents. fifty years ago, yet some of Halyburton's correspondents are known to us.

Conservator.

¹ I had intended to give here an account of the Conservator and his court, as well as of the men who in succession held the office, Andrew Haliburton being the first whose name I find in connexion with it. Much of the materials for such a dissertation are to be found in Scotland, but a large and interesting part of that history must be sought in Holland and Belgium, I had made arrangements for crossing to the country so interesting to Scotsmen, in connexion with a meeting of Northern Antiquaries, which was proposed to be held at Antwerp last autumn; but that meeting was abandoned in consequence of a visitation of cholera, and the disease was particularly virulent in the district where I had hoped to have got access to the most authentic and interesting materials for my subject; so the investigation was reserved for another season. I am not sure that the importance of my omission justifies the egotism of this note. After all, the ledger of Andrew Halvburton, although it is interesting to know that he was Conservator, is nothing more than the book of a Scotch commission merchant trading in the Netherlands.

vested with all the authority which the Pope could give our country. He was evidently a man of energy, and showed it in his fierce and successful fight against the rival Archbishop of Glasgow, which came to an end only when Parliament threatened to stop the supplies of both. He had some tastes befitting a scholar, and it is pleasant to find a large part of his account was for books brought from Flanders. He was amongst the earliest of our known book collectors, and several books with his mark are still preserved. Two of these are in Edinburgh University Library, one bearing the mark³—

We probably owe to his care one of the best copies of the Scotichronicon of Fordun and Bower, that in the Edinburgh University Library, which bears to be written by Magnus Macculloch, the Archbishop's amanuensis.1 To say that he was an irregular liver, a churchman regardless of his vows, is but what can be said of all the great beneficed churchmen of that time (except Elphinstone). The two young men committed to Halyburton's charge in 1493, for whose clothes and personal expenses he charges his right reverend correspondent, were, without much doubt, sons of the Archbishop, though only one bears his I believe nothing is known of their after The bishop's name was of good account in the In 1495, he is thinking of death (not too soon, for he had worn the mitre seventeen years, and he died next year), and he gives a commission to his old friend for a tomb or monument,2 which, after the most approved fashion of the time, was to be made and ornamented at Bruges.

The next Archbishop of St. Andrews was also a Archbishop correspondent of Halyburton. This was James, the King's brother, and who appears in our book only as Duke of Ross,—the young prince immortalized by

The Archbishop was owner also of the Fordun among the Harleian MSS., and has written his name at the beginning and end of that MS.

A 'throwch' is Halyburton's word. A 'through stone' is still a vulgar name for a raised tomb in Scotland. Those commissioned for the bishop and others of Halyburton's correspondents were probably the monument once common in Scotland, as in other countries, the high tomb, or altar tomb, placed on the church floor, often with recumbent figures on it. Ariosto, whom the King, his brother, was glad to provide for, with the great Archbishopric and the Abbeys of Holyrood, Dunfermline and Arbroath, which he held in commendam. He was not a mere monopolist of benefices, however. We have in his appointment to the office of Chancellor by his brother, the accomplished King James IV., better evidence than Ariosto's, that he was a prince of intelligence and education. He held the Chancellorship for hardly a year before his death in 1504. Ariosto may have seen him at Rome, when those

From Flanders he was supplied with signets of gold and silver, as well as the long oval seal of his bishopric. One charge, that for a messenger bearing 'white rose letters to my Lady,' points to his connexion with the widowed Duchess of Burgundy and her faction, the supporters of Perkin Warbeck, claiming to represent the white rose of York.1 The Duke, like his predecessor in the archbishopric, chose to have his monument made in Bruges, and he showed some care for its appearance, since he allowed a charge of seven crowns for its design. The whole monument was costly, and, indeed, all the Duke's expenses were on a princely He was pleased with his bankers, and made a present to one of them, Cornelius Altonitz, of six silver goblets, weighing forty-eight ounces, for the 'gentrys he did to my Lord in the laying out of his money.'

There is the customary supply of clothes, and although there is no wine this year, there are spices and comfits for the bishop's table; for Elphinstone was no ascetic. There are church vessels, a 'counterfeit chalice,' and two chalices (of silver) double over-gilt, each in its case. Lastly, there is a payment for repairs and a new case to the bishop's horloge. There was then no watchmaker in Aberdeen, but we are not told which of the towns of the Low Countries produced the clever artist, if, indeed, Halvburton did not send the watch to Paris to be mended.

The Archedeacon of St.

I mention the account of the Archdeacon of St. Andrews, partly because it gives some information of our intercourse with the Continent. It appears that the great churchman and his neighbour, the Abbot of St. Colme's Inch, took their horses when they sailed for Flanders, which implies more stowage than we are prepared to expect in the trading craft of those days. The Archdeacon paid for his horses' freight three pounds. But the churchman did not go to the inn at Bruges; he and his servants found accommodation in Halyburton's house, and the Conservator scruples not to send in his bill for the Perhaps Halyburton had no house of his own at Bruges, and having hired a house for their joint accommodation, allowed the Archdeacon to pay his share of the rent. The Archdeacon, like other churchmen, had to send ducats to Rome. his own purse he preferred Utrecht guldens. Like all Scotchmen, he made his remittances in wool. hides, salmon, trouts. He took the value back in claret wine, embroidering silk, gold thread, perhaps for church ornaments, clothes and black hats for himself, pieces of fustian, a frontal to an altar, of red say embroidered, table-cloths, towelling, ser-Dunfermline had not yet learnt to manufacture her beautiful napery.

For his church he took a chalice; but the Archdeacon was economical, and only the cup was of silver double over-gilt, the stand was copper. Another chalice was all of silver double over-gilt, and weighed seventeen ounces.

The Archdeacon required ten dozen of 'rasit wark,' which I take to be a dinner-service of pewter. The plate he bought was only three pieces, weighing seven marks, and costing fifteen pounds. Scott. I believe that the twenty-four pillars of brass, which appear in his account, weighing five hundred and ninety-two pounds, were connected with these monuments, perhaps part and parcel of them. Finally, the Archdeacon having a kindness for John of Wells, instructed his friend Halyburton to give him, at the next Yule after his departure, a gown of Ypres black, lined with say, a doublet of black camlet, a hat, a bonnet, a pair of hose; in short, a handsome suit for Christmas, at the respectable cost of £3, 14s.

The trading correspondents of Halyburton.

Of the trading correspondents of Halyburton, not much can be known individually. The names in a merchant's ledger of our own time are not destined to live for three hundred years. But some of them are individually known as bountiful to the Church, as founders of chapels or altars; and many of them are of known families, merchant burgesses of Edinburgh. Such were the Pennycuiks, Tailyefers, Turing, Twedy, Towris, Halkerston, Carketyl, Chirnside, Lawson.

Among the Edinburgh burghers, one stands out prominently, Walter Chepman. The very etymology walter Chepolog of his name shows him to be of a merchant family, and he wrote himself merchant burgess of Edinburgh. He sent a few sacks of wool and skins (some of them rotten!) and got back a piece of velvet with a little kist to pack it in, and that is all the commodity that we trace in 1496 to the hands of Walter Chepman, to be exposed for sale in the little shop with its fore-stair opening on the Southgate of Edinburgh.

But there was room there and spirit in the owner First Scotch for a mighty undertaking. A little while after his printing. dealing with Halyburton for such small wares, Chepman and his partner Myllar set up their printing press in that little shop; and the works of that press are still the admiration and envy of printers. It is a pity to find the grand emancipator, the printing press, coupled with monopoly, but it was still the age for exclusion in all trade, and the risk of the adventure to two citizens of Edinburgh, as well as the noble results, may save James IV. from the censure of the philosopher. While most of Halyburton's merchant correspondents are of Edinburgh or Lothian, we meet with some names that speak a Northern habitat. Thus Andrew Cullan is, without doubt, the merchant burgess of Aberdeen, who figures for half a century in benefactions to the church of his patron St. Nicholas; in all undertakings for the common good, and in places of trust, showing the confidence of his fellow-citizens. So, Thomas Pratt, John Rattrye, Duncan Collyson, John Anderson, William Fuddes, Robert Craig, Robert Blyndsele, John Cullan, are all probably citizens of 'the Brave Town.'

Other trading correspondents.

Scotch exports.

The exports of Scotland in that age were chiefly specimen of Scotch printing, consists of several separate works from their press, printed about the year 1508. There are in that volume works of Dunbar and of Chaucer, tales of chivalry and romance, poems of the broadest and most homely humour, joined to excellent moral poems, old ballads, and among them an antique version of Robin Hood.

Remarkable contents of their first volume. It is worth stopping to remark what channels of thought and fields of literature are opened up by these productions of one press, almost in one year, to a people hitherto ignorant of printing. The reader is introduced to the great romance of Western Christendom, the epic of King Arthur and the Knights of his Round Table; to poems serious or satirical, the foundations of a fine part of our National literature. It was a great boon to make the Scotch student acquainted with the genius of Chaucer; but perhaps even greater, to scatter over Scotland the charming mythology of Robin Hood.

The Advocate's Library volume is unique, and of the reprint, done under the care of Mr. D. Laing, only a few copies escaped from a fire at the bookbinder's. Mr. Laing has collected, with reverent care, all that is known of Walter Chepman, but I think has hardly done justice to the beauty of his typography. It is perhaps more conspicuous in the Breviary of Aberdeen, which issued from the same press a few years later, and which has saved from oblivion a rich treasure of the legends of our early Church. The reprint of the Breviary for the Bannatyne Club, is a masterpiece of the printer's art.

the unmanufactured produce of the country. The Highlands and Borders still produced their staple of wool, hides, and skins, in small quantities, notwithstanding the unsettled state of Scotland, insecurity of property from other causes, and especially the inveterate plundering propensities of a large part of their population. The flocks and herds suffered more by the insecure state of the country than the wild animals, and the furs of marten and weasel continued plentiful in Guicciardini's time.

Of wool we find varieties named, some by the Wool, its market title, as 'bona lana,' white, brown, middling wool, Closter; and others from their place of growth or sale, as Galloway, Aberdeen's wool, Newcastle wool. Newbottle wool must mean the clip of the Lanarkshire moors, where the Abbey had its 'Forest wool' was from Ettrick. great pastures. Yarrow and Tweed, and the other glens included in the district so commonly called 'the Forest,' that the name became synonymous with the sheriffdom of Selkirk. Lambs' wool and Tyd wool were sold separately, but all in small quantities.1

And this leads me to inquire why the exports should Cause of so have been on so small a scale? Why considerable signments. merchants should have made consignments so trifling in value, and never great ones? I believe the true answer to be, that the proper produce of a pastoral country, its flocks and its herds, had been destroyed or reduced to the smallest amount by the chronic disturbance I have already spoken of, and the state of rural management which we shall find flowing At an earlier period, before the fatal feud that separated England from Scotland, the southern Highlands and Border hills, chiefly in the hands of monastic landlords, were known for large quantities of fine wool, which had an established character in the foreign market, and its name at least was known to Halvburton and his correspondents. Whether at that time—in the time of peace and good rule that extended from David to the War of the Succession—the great central and northern Highlands were equally productive, I cannot pretend to say.1 The produce of that extensive Highland district was evidently very small in the time of Bishop Elphinstone and Halyburton, and it cannot have increased much during the following century, perhaps it might be safe to say for two centuries.

In records and private charter-chests, we can trace pretty clearly the manner of rural occupation which produced such results; but we have perhaps the fullest and best evidence concerning the whole matter in a rental of the great lordship of Huntly, or rather of the whole possessions of the noble family of Gordon, in the year 1600. I cannot resist giving a short account of it.

The rental of Huntly, 1600.

¹ The name of Aberdeen wool, apparently in small quantity, marked the produce of the glens of Mar, which would naturally be shipped at that port—the 'highland wool' of our day.

The possessions—farms, we should call them now, are generally let to several tenants in joint occupancy, each contributing his share to the labour, and his proportion of the rent. A very common size of farm is two ploughgates let to eight joint tenants, each holding two oxgangs, and contributing two oxen and labour to the common ploughs (of eight oxen each).

The payments, like the labour, were in common, Rent, mail, and consisted of, first, a very small sum of moneyrent called 'mail,' or 'silver-mail;' and, secondly, of certain bolls of oatmeal and bere, universally known as 'ferme.' The money is of course Scots money, then reduced almost to its lowest degradation, and the solid part of the rent is 'ferme,' producing, on a barony of moderate extent, such a quantity of oatmeal and bere fit for malting, as to require distinct barns for holding the lord's share.

Besides the mail and the ferme there was a pay-Customs. ment of 'customs,' including a considerable variety of commodities in small quantities, such commodities as were devoted to the present use of the lord's kitchen, or his house. These are often a mart or beast to be killed at Martinmas, two or three wedders or muttons, as many lambs, grice or young pigs, geese, capons, poultry, chickens, eggs, and almost universally the ancient tax of a 'reek hen,' or a hen for every fire house. There was a very little tallow, sometimes distinguished as 'brew tallow,' paid from the parish ale-house, a little butter, and rarely cheese. Besides these commodities for the kitchen, in the 'customs' of the low-country farms is often included a few ells of 'cloth,' not made of the native wool, but linen cloth of three-quarters broad for my lady's napery-chest, made of homegrown lint, or, failing the linen, a commutation of ten shillings an ell.

It is observable that in this Rental there is no difference in the measure of extent nor in the kind of rent between the Highland and the low-country farm. In the wilds of Badenoch and Lochaber, the measure of the possession is in ploughgates, and the payment of rent uniformly in ferme meal and bere, just as in the low country of Enzie and Strathbogie.¹ While the rents are paid 'in kind,' and represent the produce of the land, in all that vast estate, reaching from sea to sea, across a country now closely pastured by sheep or cattle, there is no payment of wool or woollen cloth, nor of hides or skins, nor any of sheep or cattle, beyond the occasional mart or wedder for the lord's own table.

At that period, it is evident that there were no cattle or sheep reared in large herds and droves to seek their food on the hills; nothing but the petty flock of sheep or herd of a few cows, still found in ¹ The Cabrach, a lofty moorland range at the heads of Doveran, is an exception. There we find butter and cheese instead of ferme meal and bere.

The 'forest' of Morven, in Mar, was perhaps under deer exclusively. It is let to one tenant for £100 of money, without ferme or customs. Deer are not named in the rental. They had been almost extirpated, and existed only in small herds in the highest glens and mountain corries.

Aberdeen subscription, 1493.

I have not met with anything that shows the absence of actual money, at the period of our ledger, so much as a subscription in 1493 by the citizens of Aberdeen for repairing the choir of their parish church. It was a very popular object, for the citizens were not only good churchmen, but were proud of their church, and zealous servants of their patron, St. Nicholas. But money was not to be had, and a large majority of the subscribers bound themselves to pay in kind, as we should say; each man in the commodity in which he dealt, or which he chanced to have in store. Alexander Reid. Alderman and Alexander Chalmer each gave a barrel of salmon: Alexander Menzies a barrel of salmon and a hundred of lentrinware; Robert Blindsele gave a barrel of salmon and eighteen shillings of money; others gave barrels of grilse, a quarter of a hundred lambskins, a dozen futfell. Many bestowed lentrinware, but a still larger number subscribed salmon and grilse. Richard Wricht, not being rich in world's goods, subscribed labores pro octo diebus, and William Wricht the same. Those who gave money did not for the most part go beyond five shillings. Andrew Litster gave 'ane cow.' Another burgess subscribed a piece of lead; but small quantities of sheepskins and lambskins were the most usual contributions after the fish of the river.1

I suppose the demand becoming great at any time produces such a slaughter of the pearl-bearing mussel, mature or not, that it takes a considerable time to repair the damage, and during that interval the Scotch pearl is not brought to market and is forgotten.3

If, writes Nicholas, you cannot get them otherwise, ask them as a gift from the King [of Scots, Alexander I.], who in this commodity is richer than any man,—in hac re omnium

Imports into Scotland.

In return for these raw commodities or simple manufactures, Scotland imported in those days nearly everything of consumption beyond the bare necessaries of existence. But means were small. and the traders were mere retail dealers. package put up by Halyburton for his trading correspondents, shows their commerce to have been something like that of a 'merchant,' as the little dealer is still called in a Scotch country He packed in the same bale a piece of canvas, of fustian, or buckram, a small quantity of fine cloth, 'Ryssells' or 'Ypres,' some linens for the table, and lawn, holland, cambrics, for dress, pieces of silk, velvet, satin, damask, taffety, ribbons, sewing silk, and silk for embroidery, gold and silver leaf, gold and silver thread, a small packet of pins, not stuck in a paper as now but in a cloth, and a belt to the 'prins,' which I venture to read a 'sheath' for knitting needles. One of his consignments to a single correspondent would, in the last generation, have furnished respectably the shop of 'the merchant' in a remote country town, and not very long ago might have been found exposed for sale together in many a booth or modest shop of a 'general merchant' in the High Street of Glasgow or Edinburgh.

The commodities imported ought to give us some Evidence afidea of the manner of life in Scotland during Haly-manner of burton's time, but there is much wanting to our living. knowledge. In the satins and cramoisies and velvets, damasks and taffeties, even in the Ryssells and Ypres cloth, we probably have only the state dress of our great-grandfathers and grandmothers, at a time when dress was a more important concern than it is at present, when the apparel of both sexes was not only held to indicate the position of the wearer, but was a family treasure handed down for generations. All the evidence goes to show that the dress both of men and women was much handsomer and much more costly in the sixteenth century than in the nineteenth, and as its price formed a larger expenditure, the proportion of domestic bequeathed at death was a more notable share of the inheritance.

Ladies' occupa-

The considerable proportion of work materials, canvas, silks, gold and silver thread, point to the occupation of ladies at a time when the tailor was still the only dressmaker, for women as well as men. Ladies had not the resource of making or superintending their own dresses, and being, with rare exceptions, unprovided with out-door amusements, and altogether innocent of literature, what remained to them was a more than German devotion to the kitchen and confection-room, the napery-chest, and the never-ending labours or joys of the tapestry or embroidery frame.

Jewels and plate. Of more precious merchandise, jewellery was almost confined to jewelled rings. We have a ring with a turquoise, a ring with a ruby, a sapphire in a ring. Silver plate was in the shape of chalices for the church, vessels for the table, and ornaments for the buffet, plain or gilt, parcel gilt, or double gilt. They all went under the name of pieces, and are distinguished by their weight, not by the manufacture. Forks and spoons of silver were not yet known with us, and the common dinner-service was of pewter, unless there was a still cheaper material from Delf, of which I have not found evidence.

Books.

On the other hand, foreign literature was in demand in Scotland, Archbishop Scheves pays five hundred crowns in gold at one time for a purchase of books, and many of Halyburton's other correspondents bring them home in smaller quantities. Some part, no doubt, are breviaries and service-books, but one order is for books of the law, and we may indulge the belief that Halyburton himself loved a handsome book, since we find him paying the sum of £1, 16s. to a bookbinder at Bruges.¹

Perhaps some of the wine drunk in Scotland was Wine. brought direct from Bordeaux and the wine countries. As yet whisky was not, and although smallbeer was the drink of the commons, and a mightier ale satisfied the good burghers and lairds, which the highest class sometimes condescended to share, yet French and Southern wines were the drink of the upper orders. My Lord of Holyrood, Abbot Robert Bellenden, famous for his charity scattered amongst 'poor householders and indigent people,' and his munificent benefactions to his church, lived sumptuously in his own household, but got his wine cheaper than even in our days. For three puncheons of wine bought in Middleburgh, he had to pay only £7, 16s., and he actually got two puncheons of claret for £1 each.2 Another correspondent, Andrew Moubray, younger, who may have dealt in wine, among other commodities, buys two tuns of Gascony claret for £4 a tun, and two butts of Malmesey (Malvoisie), which cost together £12, 13s. 6d., but in both cases the wine was bought in the Netherlands, not at head-quarters,—the first at the Dam (Amsterdam), the other at Middleburgh.¹ Another butt of Malmesey goes to Andrew Cullen, costing him at the first buying £5, 15s.²

It will shock the modern wine-drinker to learn that the greater part of this store of wine, perhaps all the claret and much of the Rhine wine, was mulled and drunk hot. It is for this, and for the baker, pastrycook, and confectioner that the sugar is required which we find in our ledger, as well as the great quantity and variety of spices.

Wines used hot. Sugar and great quantity of spice.

Some commodities missed:

Spirits.

It is worth noting the absence of some commodities which would swell a modern consignment to Scotland. No brandy occurs, nor any strong waters, though both in the Netherlands and France spirits must have been used in Halyburton's time, but perhaps in but small quantities. Tobacco was not introduced to England until the end of the sixteenth century, and later into Scotland.

Tea and coffee.

Tea and coffee are wanting, and their absence suggests perhaps the greatest change of manners that has taken place in the three centuries since the date of our book.

Fine Arts.

There is not much of the fine arts, beyond the ornamental tombs and silver plate and jewellery which I have mentioned. No pictures were yet brought from Flanders, no produce of the school of the Van Eyks with which the merchants of Bruges and Antwerp were already ornamenting their palaces. It was a long time till the feeling for art reached Scotland. But Art did at last follow in the path of commerce: and a century after Halvburton had exchanged the wool of Scotland for the luxuries of the Netherlands, our first Scotch painter went from Aberdeen to learn his art at the feet of Rubens.1

We know that at a time before Halyburton's Hangings and period, the walls of rooms unplastered, were hung carpete. with cloth, which also covered the doors. In the apartments of greater houses, these hangings were from the looms of Arras, and we find in Halvburton's accounts that this beautiful manufacture was also used for bed-hangings.2 Carpets for the floor were not yet invented. Straw and rushes in the public-rooms did their duty, but benches and settles had coverings which also came from Arras and the Netherlands.

Trade between Scotland and the Nether-lands.

The history of the connexion of Scotland with the Netherlands is really the history of Scotch As I have endeavoured to show, two trade. countries so circumstanced, inhabited by kindred people, each affording so much that was wanted by the other, could not fail to be drawn together. The first approach, or rather that of which we have the first evidence, is made by ourselves. Before the end of the twelfth century, the monks of Melrose found it desirable to obtain a right of free passage through Flanders, the best market for their wool; and Philip Count of Flanders and Vermandois (the crusading Count, who fell at the siege of Acre, in 1191) granted a charter to the brethren of Mailros, enjoining all his men and dependants, as they love him and his honour, not to dare to extort any toll or exaction in land or harbour, nor to put hands upon them, nor to take any of their goods in pledge.¹

The monks of Melrose their privilege in Flanders.

1 Nec de rebus eorum quicquid in vadimonium auferre.—I think it means to arrest goods in security for the appearance of a party sued in court. The contingency provided against, is a quarrel between the merchants of Flanders and Britain (the Count of Flanders calls it Anglia), when process against any British merchants might be held to include the goods of these Melrose monks.

The beautiful charter of the Count of Flanders, who took the style of Count of Vermandois in right of his wife, is preserved amongst that treasure of old Melrose charters, now the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, and which his Grace has deposited in the General Register House at Edinburgh. It was published thirty years ago in the Liber de Melros, and will appear in a yet more unquestionable shape in the great collection of Scotch manu-

But, if the first advances came from our side, the weavers of Ghent and Bruges were not always to be content with what the wool-growers, or the hunters and fishers of our Highlands chose to send them. An amphibious people, full of maritime enterprise, soon made their way down our coast on trading adventures, and found a port at the mouth of every little river, where their forefathers had perhaps left a colony ages before, and where they still found people kindred to themselves, speaking with a good Teutonic tongue, made up like their own of many elements, but to be one day welded into a serviceable language, fit for prose or song.

It was long after the Melrose privilege, but still Protection to the Netherlonger before Halyburton's time, that we find the next landers in contemporary evidence of the connexion in trade being kept up; and this time the Netherlanders are the movers in the negotiation. They wanted only to be protected against lawless violence in the exercise of their trade, and they obtained a Brief from the Scotch Sovereign, who declared his will that the merchants from the dominions of his friend. thought of great importance. His pontificate extended from 1181 to 1185, and it is observable that he does not give the Count of Flanders his conjugal title of Count of Vermandois.-Liber de Melros, Nos. 14, 15. National MSS. of Scotland, No.

Friesland, with their ships and all their goods, should be received with honour, and permitted to dispose of their merchandise, according to the laws and customs of Scotland, with the much desired privilege that each man should be liable only for his own debts.¹

It hardly wants the aid of such disjointed evidence to prove to us that the trade once begun between Flanders and Scotland continued and increased. In less than a century from that time, we become acquainted with a trading community of our own country, showing a great mixture of a low country element, both in persons and institutions. This was the royal burgh of Aberdeen, the early records of which present us with a very curious picture of burgal life and usages, and incidentally throw light upon the Scotch connexion with the Netherlands. The town was surrounded with rough neighbours, always in arms, and of very predatory habits, but not incapable of kindly feeling, and not at all insensible to the luxuries and plenty which a trading community brought into the midst of them. Perhaps this evil neighbouring, which kept them constantly on the alert for defence and mutual protection, was good for the discipline of the citizens. They gloried in submission to their magistrates, unlike modern burghers, and rose to the ringing of the common bell with as zealous a spirit of union as that with which the burghers of Ghent obeyed the tolling of their great bell 'Roland.'

In some of the earliest transactions recorded in the town books, we find men whose names are sufficient to show their Flemish origin. Two of the first that occur-Mauritius Suerdsleper and Wil-A.D. 1398. liam Moden—are mixed up in what must have been a street brawl. Popular institutions.

Could the Aberdeen burghers and the Government of Scotland be ignorant at that date of the death of the Duke of Burgundy, at the siege of Naney, three months before (5th January 1477)? At that season of the year their correspondence with the Low Countries might be interrupted.

But mark the price of this liberality! The magistrates and Town-Council, and the most part of the community being present, and representing the body of the whole town (self-constituted representatives, I fear), ordained, that no manner of man should be made burgess of guild (that is, should be entitled to trade) except burgesses' sons, or those who married burgesses' daughters.1

walk, nor ward' there. But every page of these records of Aberdeen—so fortunately preserved and so judiciously published—is full of the most instructive details of burghal life and the usages of merchants in Scotland.

Aberdeen the type of our burghs.

We see there more plainly what was going on in all the burghs of Scotland with greater or less energy. We distinguish the true burghal element, the assertion of freedom with submission to authority. There are our own ancient institutions mixed and modified with the Netherlandish, or rather the general European spirit of free communes. It is the healthy and simple childhood that was to produce the manly vigour of a great trading community. The subsequent progress of the town may have been accidental, but it was singularly fortunate that material well-being should enjoy the civilizing of a splendid hierarchy and a series of bishops, producing men like Elphinston, who founded the University, and Dunbar, who endowed the bridge.

In preparing for the press our oldest merchant's book, I have sought to throw light upon some points

Counties has made accessible a vast mass of materials, necessary for the local history, and the history of society among us.

The last document I propose to notice touching Treaty of Trade with Charles v. the relations of Scotland and Flanders, is afforded by the archives of another of our burghs, much interested in former times in trade with the Netherlands.

In the archives of the city of Edinburgh is found recorded 'the Peax between this realm and the Imperatour, dated at Antwerp 1st May 1551.

The treaty is in Latin, of course. There is something amusing in the contrast of the style and titles of the contracting parties. On behalf of the young Queen of Scotland and her tutor the Duke of Chatelherault, Sir Thomas Erskine, Knight, contracts and promises. On the other side, we have the principal counsellors of Charles, by Divine clemency Emperor of the Romans (semper Augustus) and of Germany, the Spains' and both Sicilies' King, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Lorraine, Brabant, Limburg and Luxemburg, and Gueldres; Count Palatine of Hapsburgh, Flanders, Artois, and Burgundy, and Prince of Hainault, Holland, Zeland, Ferrete, Namur, and Zutphen, of Suabia and the Holy Empire Marquis, Lord of Frisia, of the salt springs of Mechlin, of the city, towns, and province of Utrecht on this side Saal and on the other, and of Groningen; Dominator in Asia and Africa.

Ratification of older treaties. But it is a general alliance of friendship on equal footing. Old treaties are ratified, in particular one between James of Scotland and Philip Duke of Burgundy, made in 1448. The ancient friendship is renewed; and the special privileges granted to Scotch subjects in the Netherlands, by Louis Earl of Flanders, in 1359, and Philip Duke of Burgundy, in 1394, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, son of the said Philip, in 1469, and also a contract of 1529 and 1531, are confirmed and renewed.

There are provisions for putting down of piracy and pirates,—for perpetual peace and good neighbourhood by land and sea, so that the subjects of each sovereign may pass everywhere through the dominions of the other, without passport, buying and selling at their pleasure. It is a treaty of absolute freedom of trade—solutis teloneis et vectigalibus.

THE TABLE OF CUSTOMS, 1612.

The next contribution to the history of Scotch trade, included in this volume, is the Tariff or Table Tariff of of Rates of Custom, and Valuation of Merchandises. Customs, 1612. settled by Royal Warrant, in 1612. It was chosen as the most complete of those Customs tables, which seem to have originated in a very practical Convention of the Estates, held at Dundee in May 1597. When it was printed it was believed also to be the earliest extant, but since it has gone through the press another table has been discovered, nearer the date of that Convention at Dundee, settled indeed Earlier Table in the same year, 1597, which, though not so complete as that here printed, affords some additional light by its variations, and a few of these will be found at the end of this Preface.

When I bring these forward as early tariffs, I only mean that they represent the earliest attempts to collect and value all articles of export and import liable in custom. It would be a great mistake to suppose these the first authoritative Customs tables, for in truth there are perhaps no older documents of a public nature than some of the rude and little discriminating lists of duties on imports and exports that are found in our ancient law manuscripts. Assisa de Tolloneis and the Chapters de Custuma Portuum¹ can be traced back on good evidence to the period when Lothian and Northumberland were subject to the same law and government, and when the tariff of Newcastle-upon-Tyne was identical with that of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and collected by the same authority,—that of the good King David. It is difficult in those very early lists to distinguish between the great or King's custom and the harbour dues or petty customs in which the burgh had an interest, nor is it now of much importance; for no labour bestowed on estimating the change in the value of money can make the information these old tables afford as to rates and prices of any value. What interests us now is to ascertain the commodities themselves, the articles of commerce in that carly time. The most authentic materials for that purpose are collected in the first volume of the folio edition of the Acts of Parliament of Scotland rude tables as are there printed, modified by the changes of many ages, and subject to the continual fluctuation of the value of money, must have been used as the warrants for collecting customs down to about the time at which we are now arrived.

May 1597.

The Convention of Estates at Dundee set themselves in good earnest, and according to their lights, to regulate and improve the Revenue. Among other Acts, they ordained that all merchandise brought within the realm should pay of custom twelve Customs' duty of 12d. in the pennies of every pound's worth; and certain persons pound. were appointed with power to set down the ABC of the custom of all wares. This part of their ordinance was at once complied with, and probably that ABC was used as the rule of custom taxation for a few years. But it was soon found to be defective; some of the rates were too high, others too low, and a number of commodities were altogether omitted. To remedy these defects, the tariff of 1612, now printed, was framed, and it seems to have been the authoritative warrant for customs through all that disturbed time down to the Restoration.

It is certainly very carefully formed, although we Tariff of 1612. may regret that it appears intended to contain and exhaust all articles of possible commerce. It would have suited our purpose, the purpose of the historian, better, if it had indicated the commodities which were habitually or even occasionally shipped and landed, bought, sold, bartered in Scotland, just nine years after King James had gone to fill the long-expected seat of Queen Elizabeth, and thought that he had ended the national feud which had so long interrupted the commerce of his two kingdoms. In this respect we might hope for most cords, Mr. George Robertson, who very kindly informed me of his discovery. Its title and such of the entries as seem to illustrate the more complete tariff now printed, are subjoined to the Preface.

information from the smaller number of articles included in the Exports. But some disturbing causes deprive even this portion of part of its interest. For instance, the very first entry of articles for Export is the same commodity which stands at the head of the Imports; the only difference is that Aires (oars) on being transported out of the kingdom are to pay five pound the hundred, while they are set down amongst Imports at a duty of twenty pounds. So Brazil, a dye-wood, Cables, a foreign manufacture, and other foreign commodities entered in the list of Scotch exports, show that many of these duties are rather transit dues than common customs of export.

Suggestive as is this large catalogue of the articles of commerce of two and a half centuries ago, one thing is particularly striking,—the disproportionate importance and room allowed to the head of 'Drugs.' Feeling my own want of learning in the Pharmacopœia, I requested Sir J. Y. Simpson to introduce this subject to my readers, and to him I am indebted for the following remarks:-

Sir J. Y. Simpson's remarks

' The list of drugs and chemicals contained in the on list of drugs. Customs table of 1612 is certainly very remarkable, in consequence of its extent and variety, and is calculated to give to the medical profession and others a higher estimate of the "cunning and mystery" of the art of the apothecary and physician in Scotland two and a-half centuries ago, than we can derive from any other source with which I am acquainted. In the list—so very ably read and glossed by Professor Maclagan—there are named above 220 different medicinal and chemical substances. Of these about a fourth are still retained in the last British Pharmacopæia of 1864.

'At the date of the Table of Customs, a great battle, begun in the previous century, was still waging in the European schools of physic between the two opposite sects of the Galenists and Chem-The former declared stoutly and long for all the old internal medicines mentioned in the Greek works of Galen, and hence almost entirely for drugs derived from the vegetable and animal kingdoms. The Chemists again fought for the administration internally of metallic and chemical remedies, as antimony, mercury, etc., various salts, and distilled waters, oils, and extracts. It is interesting to observe among the medicines imported into Scotland in 1612, a goodly sprinkling of medicinal metals and For, only three years previously, or in 1609, the strife between the Galenists and Chemists was still so fierce on the Continent, that M. Besnier, a Parisian physician, was expelled from the Faculty of Medicine for administering antimony to a patient, the Supreme Council of Paris having totally proscribed its use some fifty years before.

'This drug tariff possesses additional interest when we couple it with the fact, that, at its date, the practice of physicians in Scotland was still commingled with many superstitious practices and beliefs, as with faith in the King's touch for the cure of scrofula (Charles II. touched 92,000 such patients, and his "Chirurgion," John Browne, tells us the marvels produced by the royal finger were only doubted by "Ill-affected men and Dissenters"); in the efficacy of charm-stones, like the Lee Penny (for the purchase of which, in the reign of Charles I., the magistrates of Newcastle offered to forfeit £6000); and in the healing power of holy wells, amulets, relics, phylacteries, abracadabras, etc. As late as the middle of the last century the Edinburgh College of Physicians published in their Pharmacopœia a formula for the Decoctum ad Ictericos, a compound which, like some used in other diseases, acted according to the old doctrine of Signatures; that is to say, the patient was yellow, and this yellow mixture was given with the hope of curing him of his yellowness.

'Ample as the catalogue is, however, it would be wrong to suppose that the list of drugs imported in 1612 contains a full enumeration of all the medicines employed by the Scottish Leeches and Mediciners of those days. They used in addition various "simples" that could be obtained at home, and did not require to be imported. In the first Scottish Pharmacopæia, published by the Edinburgh Royal College of Physicians in 1699, there is an enumera-

For instance, among the list of remedies obtainable from the animal kingdom to be got at home, and used in ointments, lotions, potions, etc., are "Lumbrici terrestres," "Millepedae," "Cicadae," "Formicae," "Limaces," "Bufo," "Ranae," 'Hirundines" as well as "Hirudines." the "Fel Catuli, Perdicis et Tauri," the "Sanguis Columbae, Hirci et Leporis," some thirteen "Stercora," and among them "Stercus Anserinum, Ovile, Equi non castrati, Vaccinum, Humanum," etc.; the "Testes Equi et Galli," the "Secundina Humana," and distilled preparations from the dead human subject,1 as the spirit, volatile salt, and oil from the "Cranium Hominis violentâ morte extincti." Another "simple," laid down in the first Edinburgh Pharmacopæia as required to be furnished and ready in all proper apothecaries' shops, namely the "Urina pueri impuberis," could be provided, of course, by any young curious, and, I believe, a rare thin quarto volume, from the press of Edward Raban, printed at Aberdeen. It is entitled 'Pharmaco-Pinax, or a Table and Taxe of the Pryces of all vsuall Medicaments, simple and composed, contayned in D. Gordon's Apothecarie and Chymicall Shop within Mr. Robert Farquhar's high lodging in New Aberdene.'

¹ The first Edinburgh Pharmacopœia contains another human product as a drug—and one necessarily an imported drug—(it is, indeed, mentioned in the Table of 1612)—viz., Egyptian mummy (Mumia), the best samples of which, observed Dr. Alston in his 'Lectures on Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh' (London 1770), 'are rare in Europe and costly.' They are, he adds, 'said to dissolve coagulated blood, and are commended for the vertigo, apoplexy, palsy, epilepsy, convulsive and hysteric disorders, contusions, gangrenes, pleurisies, etc.'

apprentice belonging to these establishments. This ingredient, or at least the "Urina Juvenis sani," enters into the composition of the "Aqua Styptica" of this Pharmacopæia of 1699. In it also we have various other very complicated and very strange compounds,—as a "Pulvis ad Partum," containing a quantity of dried "Testiculorum Caballinorum;" a plaster made by boiling together live frogs, "Ranae vivae," earthworms, etc., etc.

'If we only possessed the list of medicines imported into Scotland in 1612, and which was drawn out some eighty years before the appearance of the first Edinburgh Pharmacopæia, we should now perhaps entertain more respect for the Scottish physicians and drugs of the seventeenth century. But the home supplies of drugs mentioned in the official Edinburgh Pharmacopæia of 1699 are awkwardly detractive, and rather revolting.'

Customs and Imports set in tack, 1609. Among some miscellaneous bundles of papers in the General Register House, is a draft of a Tack of the Customs, as well outward as inward, of the whole realm of Scotland, set in 1609 for five years.¹ The customs had been farmed previously (I find evidence of it in 1600) but I do not find the terms or rent. In 1609, the king lets, for the yearly rent of 115,000 merks, the whole customs, inward and outward, together with the whole old and new imposts of the wines; reserving the right given by sundry Acts of Parliament to noblemen, barons and free-holders, of sending out of the realm their own merchandise and goods grown on their own ground, and to bring in necessary commodities for furnishing their households free of custom. I think this exemption was not ancient with us in Scotland. How far it was operative I do not find the means of ascertaining.¹

The next minute information of the state of trade in Scotland, is derived from some accounts still preserved of the payments to the Customers at the tiane, Johne Arnot burgess of Edinburgh, Andro Woode of Largo, Thomas Fleming, Wm. Barclay of Innergellie, James Riddell in Leyth—as Cautioners.

1 This bad privilege was not likely to get into desuetude, like other Scotch laws; but I do not find when it was put an end to. If Cromwell abated the nuisance, that might account for the universal encouragement of smuggling after his time by all classes, but notably by the gentry, aggrieved by the withdrawal of their privilege. On the north-east coast, especially in Morayshire, for a century after the Restoration, everybody in town and country used brandy and foreign goods, all duty free; and the best gentry lent their stables and their servants and horses to help the 'free trader.' Scott has described the thing on the Galloway coast in his 'Guy Mannering.' The high duties of the last war produced a similar state of things along many of the English coasts. different ports, from 1617 for a few years after. Imperfect as these are, they throw some light on the manufactures, as well as on the exports and imports of our burghs.

Customs at Aberdeen, 1617.

The first shipment from Aberdeen is on 2d May. The bark of Alexander Ramsay for Flanders was charged with custom upon plaiding (11,380 ells), in packs, pacquets, and rolls, and 2700 woolskins. Another bark of Aberdeen, called the 'Margaret,' master, under God, Robert Fiddes, bound for Flanders, was charged for 2800 ells of plaiding, and 300 The 'Bon Accord,' Patrick Findlay, woolskins. master, sailed from Aberdeen to Flanders, with 10,300 ells of plaiding, and 400 woolskins. same year two little barks took cargoes amounting to 8000 lambskins, and 2500 ells of plaiding, to Danskyn. On the 9th of August, the 'Greiffhound,' a bark of Aberdeen, was loaded for Dieppe, with 21 lasts 2 barrels salmon. On the next day, the 'Blessing,' a bark of Leith, sailed from Aberdeen for Dieppe, with 18 lasts 9 barrels of salmon. On the 13th of August, the 'Blessing,' a bark of Dundee, sailed from Aberdeen to Dieppe, with 29 lasts 10 barrels On the penult of October, the bark of of salmon. Aberdeen, the 'Star,' took 2 lasts 6 barrels of Aberdeen salmon, 15 lasts and 18 barrels of Spey fish, along with 100 ells of plaiding, and 10 dakers of goatskins, and 2 dakers of wild leather, or deer These seem to be all the goods shipped from Aberdeen in the year 1617, for which either custom was taken or bullion was to be returned. I think all the ships are Scotch. I cannot account for all the salmon going to Dieppe. No account of that year's imports at Aberdeen is preserved.

None of these imperfect accounts of Customs North. notice any ports to the north of Aberdeen. This may be simply accidental. There certainly was always some small traffic between Flanders and the Moray Firth, but perhaps the customs were not very regularly or easily levied in that northern region, which deprives us of the only light which we might have on the subject.

The account of 'the merchant-goods outward Customs on enterit on the south side of the water of Forth, side of Forth. Nov. 1619, Nov. 1620,' notes—A ship of Burrowstoness, called 'The Gift of God,' whose cargo was yarn; a ship of Campvere, loaded with sheepskins.

Of the north side, 'The Gift of God,' of Kirkcaldy, North side of shipped yarn and linen-yarn from Culross; 'The 'Good Fortune' of Kirkcaldy, shipped linen-yarn from Kingorne. John Lowe's bark, of 'The Ness,' shipped at Alloa 12 chalders, and William Anderson's bark, of 'The Ness,' 10 chalders oats at Alloa.

Import custom was paid on the south side of Forth, Customs on chiefly on timber-deals, double-trees, single-trees, side. stings, unloaded from Scotch ships at St. Ninian's and at 'The Ness.' But 'a Hollander' looses (discharges) at Carrieden a mixed cargo of brimstone, North side of the Forth.

Inward custom on the north side was paid at Culross and Kirkcaldy, on timber as before, deals, stings, double-timber, single-timber, on English beir, pocks of hops, pocks of hards, half-tree (half-barrel) and three couple of figs, half-barrel of 'medopis,' one tree containing sugar and spices.

1620. Shipping.

In 1620, the collector for Preston and Aberlady took custom for goods shipped in the 'Providence' of Preston, the bark called the 'Grace of God' of Fisherraw, the 'Moyses' of Leith, the 'Salamander' of Preston, the bark 'The Fortoun' of Middleburgh. the bark 'Barbara' of Preston, the bark 'Jonas' of Preston, the 'Williame' of Preston, the 'Mary' of Leith, the 'Wine Terrie' of Leith, the 'Pelican' of Leith, the 'Grace of God' of Leith, the 'Lamb' of Leith, the 'Noble' of Middleburgh, the 'Canns' of Flushing, the bark called 'The Lyfe' of Middle-Goods shipped burgh, carrying fardells and trusses of yarn (fardell

In 1622, three merchant adventurers of Lin- $_{\rm South\ side\ of}^{1622}$ lithgow shipped in the 'Swan' of Middleburgh, the Forth. whereof Mathias Ransone is master, 700 sheepskins Exports. and four dakers of salt hides.

A bark of the Ness (Borrowstounness) called the ' Michael,' James Gibb master, carried for the same three merchants of Linlithgow 600 sheepskins and five dakers of salt hides; and other shipments in that year are of the same commodities, except one hundredweight of varn.

The note of inward customs of that year shows im-Imports. portations of English and foreign bere or barley, in large quantities; also wheat, rye, and pease; for there was manifestly a dearth of corn in Scotland in this year of 1622. There came also raisins in barrels, and black pepper, some deals and timber.

Let me name the ships in which these commodities shipping. were brought. They were, a hoy of Middleburgh, called the 'Hope,' Cornelius Jansen master; the 'Merry Katherine' of Kirkcaldy; the 'Andrew' of Kirkcaldy; the 'God's Gift' of Kirkcaldy; the 'Sea Horse' of the Brill; the 'Margaret' of Kirkcaldy; the 'Marjory' of Lin; the 'Marie' of Trailsund; the 'Fortune,' a how of Embden; the 'Pelican' of Trailsund, whereof Claus Junsone is master; the 'Grace of God' of St. Ninian; the 'Neptune,' a hoy of Embden; the 'Long Stair' of Rotterdam; the 'Black Horse' of Rotterdam; the 'Elspeth,' a bark of the Ness; the 'Jonas' of Rotterdam; the 'James' of Kirkcaldy; and, finally, a busch of Rotterdam, called the 'Sea Horse,' whereof Jan Stensone is master, brought a cargo of hards to Brignes,—namely, 12 poks containing 15 hundredweight.

1617-21. Ayr. 'The goods brocht in within the burgh of Ayr,' betuix 1617 and 1621:'—

Imported from Flanderis in the 'Flower de lice' of Ayr, John Darymple, maister; from Campveir, in the 'Gift of God;' in the 'Unicorne' of Ayr, John Murdo, master; in the 'Blessing' of Ayr, William Wylie, master; lasts of soap, hops, lit (new lit, orchard lit), hards and cairds.

Irving 1623. James Scot, Customer of Irving, rendered his account at Edinburgh 2d December 1623, and in the good old scholarly fashion, his account is in Latin—'honerat se de octo lastis halecum'—eight lasts of herrings, customed at the said burgh, and exported out of the kingdom; also 360 ells of cloth, 66 tons of coals, 6 gallons of aquavitæ, and 40 stones of wool, shipped for foreign parts within the year.

I find an account kept more methodically than most of these notes of customs, with the following title:—

Edinburgh 'The Entress of the ships, gudis and geir transexports. portit out of Edinburgh at the port of Leith, fra the last day of Octobar 1627 years, to the first day of Novembar 1628 years.'

I do not propose to follow this account in detail,1 but rather to state some of the results. entry, however, has some special attraction: it specifies the cargo of the ship 'Salutation' of Yar- A Yarmouth mouth, whereof, under God, John Hunt is master, for Italy. bound for Leghorn or Venice in Italy, 8th November 1627. The whole cargo seems to be on account of William Dick, the well-known enterprising citizen of Edinburgh. It consists of 32 lasts of red herring, 8 lasts of white herring, 100 bolls of wheat, 8 barrels of lead ore, 3 score barrels of salmon, 30

1 The sum or abstract of the account made with reference to the bullion which was to be imported against this export, is unluckily injured by damp, but the greater part is readable. It gives the following exports :-37 lasts. Red herrings, White herrings and fish, 245 ,, . 5355 bolls. Wheat, . Salmon, . 51 lasts 5 barrels. . 35½ shippunds. Linen yarn, 4230 pound weight. Boot hose, . . 13,300 pairs. . . . dakers of hides. Cloth and plaiding, 55,850 (ells.)

Futfells, . 6600 20 pieces. Fustians, Otter skins, 40 Mertrik skins, 4 Points, . 12 score groce. 72 stone. Brass, Malt, 100 bolls. Meal. 240 ..

Flour, 50 bolls. Tod skins. 13 score. Halflangs, 800 Kid skins, 3800 Rae skins, 'Currupt butter,' 4 lasts 8 barrels. Wool. . 488 stones. Oil, 32 barrels. Stirk skins, 2 daker.

There is a deduction of duty on 6500 ells of plaiding which had already paid custom at Dundee, and salmon from the North, which had also been taxed already. Also, there is to be 'discharged of this compt the 52,000 pound weight of shumach pertaining to William Dick, merchant, conform to the Lords' warrant,' and after that, the counter is to pay of bullion, conform to the Act of Parliament, and the ABC set down thereanent, 12 stone 15 pounds 14 ounces 2 deniers bullion of 12 deniers fine.

shippund of wax. During the course of this year, William Dick is a constant shipper of wheat, and almost the only one.

Shipping for exports.

It is worth while to ascertain, so far as we can, who were the carriers of our foreign trade at that time. Of the ships employed at Leith, 19 belonged to it, 12 to Prestonpans, 10 to Kirkcaldy, 8 are described as Flemish, 7 I think are Scotch, but without port expressed, 6 are of Queensferry, 5 belong to Dutchmen, 3 hail from Burntisland. There are 2 from Hamburg, 1 of Lübeck, 1 of Campvere, 1 of Yarmouth; and the little ports of Preston, Musselburgh, Kinghorn, Dysart, Ferriden, each fitted out its ship for the foreign trade of Leith.

Ports to which consigned.

Next notice the places to which the Leith shippers consigned their cargoes:—33 ships cleared for London; 20 for Campvere, the staple of the Netherlands; 9 for Flanders generally; 7 for Amsterdam; 7 for Queensburg; 3 for Rotterdam; 3 for Ireland; 2 for Stockholm.

For Hamburg, Lübeck, Elsinore, 'Lupcum,' and the Eastern seas and Italian ports were despatched one ship to each.

Cargoes.

The cargoes of these are very miscellaneous. Large quantities of hides and skins, plaiding, and Baltic waters. The Italian ports to which William Dick consigned his herring, salmon, wax, and wheat, with the trifling quantity of lead ore, are 'Leghorn or Venice,' a strange coupling of ports so distant by sea.

² I do not know what place this is. and I am equally ignorant of another, which the Leith customer writes Dallishaven. The Eastern seas are, of course, the 'cloth,' and a prodigious number of boot-hose, go to Flanders and Holland. Thither also goes the commodity which the customer enters as 'corrupt butter.' Cloth, hardware, gloves, English and cottons, with rabbit and other common furs, are sent to Stockholm and the Baltic. Scotch salmon—it is brought under cocquet from Dundee, Banff, Elgin, but chiefly, and in the largest quantity, from Aberdeen—is acceptable everywhere. rings, whether white or red, are shipped only in very small quantities. The export to Ireland (one cargo goes direct to Londonderry) is wheat, flour, malt, meal, and salt. London is the only English port to which cargoes are consigned from Leith; and London and Flanders fairly divide the export trade. Perhaps the most remarkable thing of the account is the almost entire absence of wool. the few sacks of Halyburton's days are there no longer, and one is led almost to believe that the Scotch Act of Parliament for retaining and manufacturing it at home had taken some effect.1

A subsequent part of the same account gives us Imports by at least a partial view of the Imports of the year. It is titled, 'Inward fra London,' and states the duties of the 'London wares,' brought by land to Edinburgh. These are chiefly, London cloth, camlets, bais, carsayes, Yorkshire cloth, calzico, silk, and passments, meaning embroidery, and a great many productions of the loom, with names which

I think have now lost their meaning, such as nonesopretties, figuratos, perpetuanas, tafetties, grograms, tiffany, russels, buffens, Norwich say, Carthajenes.

These imports by land pay custom at Carlisle, at Berwick, or at the middle marches, according to the road of the carrier. It had not yet occurred that Scotland should treat England as other than a foreign country, England doubtless reciprocating the feeling.

Free trade under Cromwell.

A few years later, when the Government of Scotland as well as of England had fallen into the hands of Cromwell, the barriers at Carlisle and Berwick, the odious duties which made England and Scotland foreign to each other, were swept 'Freedom of trade between the two countries was established by the ordinance or constitution of 12th April 1654, in the fullest terms, and without one of the qualifications, which in subsequent projects for communicating trade privileges to the Scots, were so perseveringly and pertinaciously retained, until the whole was at last wrung from the reluctant gripe of English trade monopolists.'1 The author whose words I quote, tells us, it was during the few years of prosperity that followed this emancipation of trade, that 'many of our commercial cities arose. Scotland enjoyed peace and abundance, and was making rapid progress in wealth.' But it did not quite so appear to an eye-witness, a competent judge and unprejudiced, save that he was an Englishman and given to measure other countries by an English standard.1 the year 1656, Thomas Tucker, an Englishman, was Thomas Tucker's Resent down into Scotland, for the purpose of intro-port, 1656. ducing order into the Excise and Customs, and upon his return, he made a report which has now become very well known. It was printed by Lord Murray for the Bannatyne Club, and, though that edition was necessarily limited, the importance and interest of its contents immediately attracted attention, and it has been used and made the subject of so many writings and speeches upon the comparative state and progress of our trade, that it would be un-

1 'Although Scotland is almost encompassed with the sea (which hath very many inletts into the mayneland), and hath a very greate number of islands adjoyneing thereunto, both on the easterne and westerne parts thereof, and soe naturally comodious for comerce and traffique, yett the barrenesse of the countrey, poverty of the people, generally affected with slothe and a lazy vagrancy of attendeing and followeing theyr heards up and downe in theyr pastorage, rather than any dextrous improvement of theyr time, hath quite banished all trade from the inland parts, and drove her downe to the very sea-side, where that little which is still remayneing (and was never greate in the most proude and flourishing times), lives pent and shutt up in a very small compasse, even of those parts where there is any exercised, which is mostly and chiefly on the east part, and see northerly along the side of the German ocean; or else on the westerne part, along Dunbryton Firth into the Irish or English seas; the rest of the country from that Firth on the west side, with all the islands up towards the most northerne headland, being inhabited by the old Scotts or wilde Irish, and speakeing theyr language; which live by feeding cattle up and downe the hills, or else fishing and fowleing, and formerly (till that they have of late beene restrayned) by plaine downeright robbing and stealeing.' -Tucker's Report, 1656, p. 24.

reasonable to dwell upon its details here. Tucker sets forth the whole customs, arrangement, and produce, and the distribution of trade through the ports of Scotland, under the administration of the Protector. The poverty of the country, and its petty trade struck the Englishman two hundred

1 He speaks of Glasgow as 'a very neate burgh towne lyeing upon the bankes of the river Cluyde,' and thus describes it: 'This towne, seated in a pleasant and fruitfull soyle, and consisting of foure streets, handsomely built in forme of a crosse, is one of the most considerablest burghs of Scotland, as well for the structure as trade of it. The inhabitants (all but the students of the Colledge which is here) are traders and dealers: some for Ireland with small smiddy coales, in open boates, from foure to ten tonnes, from whence they bring hoopes, ronges, barrell staves, meale, oates, and butter; some for France with pladding, coales, and herring (of which there is a greate fishing yearly in the Westerne sea), for which they returne salt, paper, rosin, and prunes; some to Norway for timber; and every one with theyr neighbours the Highlanders, who come hither from the isles and westerne parts; in sumer by the Mul of Cantyre, and in winter by the Torban to the head of the Loquh Fyn (which is a small neck of sandy land, over which they usually drawe theyr small boates into the Firth of Dunbarton), and soe passe up in the Cluyde with pladding, dry hides, goate, kid, and deere skins, which they sell, and purchase with theyr price such comodityes and provisions as they stand in neede of, from time to time. Here hath likewise beene some who have adventured as farre as the Barbadoes; but the losse they have sustayned by reason of theyr goeing out and comeing home late every yeare, have made them discontinue goeing thither any The scituation of this towne in a plentifull land, and the mercantile genius of the people, are strong signes of her increase and groweth, were shee not checqued and kept under by the shallownesse of her river, every day more and more increaseing and filling up, soe that noe vessells of any hurden can come neerer up than within fourteene miles, where they must unlade, and send up theyr timber and Norway trade in rafts on floates, and all other commodityes by three or four tonnes of goods at a time, in small cobbles or boates of three, foure, five, and none of aboue 6 tons a boate.' Tucker's Report, 1656, p. 38.

years ago; but the contrast of poor Scotland with the wealth and commercial activity of England then, was less striking than the comparison we might institute between the Scotland of Tucker's day and the Scotch industry, trading enterprise, and wealth of our own time.1

When Charles II. came back in 1660, neither the The Restora-King nor his advisers were inclined to adopt any of back restricthe policy of the great Usurper. England and Scot-between England were at once thrown back into the position of land. foreigners to each other, and antagonists in trade. Immediately after the Restoration, an authoritative table of customs was issued for Scotland.2

² It is preserved in the Register House, superscribed and subscribed by Charles and by Tariff of the Lauderdaill as secretary, but without date. This tariff gives us a few commodities worth noting. Among Exports we have stockings, of woollen or worset, charged 4s. the dozen pair; stockings called Leith-wynd hosen, the 100 pairs, £3; yarn, of linen or flax, pays £2 the cwt.; yarn of wool, £4 the cwt.; linen or dornick, each 20 ells, 4s.; sack or pack-cloth, each 20 ells, 2s.; aquavitæ pays 2s, the gallon on export; beer or ale, the tun, 13s. 4d.; carpets or table-cloths the piece, 1s.; cloths of all sorts of woollen and stuffs and plaiding of Scots making, each 20 ells, 3s.; coals, the chalder of Culross, 10s.,—the small chalder of Culross, 4s.; grain, meal, and malt, the growth of this kingdom, each chalder, 13s. 4d.; hides of oxen or kine, the daker there is no favour shown to English commodities. London cloth, or any sort of fine broad woollen cloth, pays ten shillings the ell; Yorkshire or any sort of coarse broad cloth, four shillings; English, Irish, and all other sorts of wool, are charged indiscriminately at a duty of £1 the hundredweight; 'Mum-beer' is charged 18s. the barrel, and all other beer £2, 8s. the barrel at import. There is no preference for English ale, which is not even mentioned, while Scotland seems to have exported some of home manufacture.

Popular feeling against free trade.

The inconvenience of such an exclusive system of customs, between two countries joined under one government, must have been very apparent; but I think it was seen and admitted by the Government sooner than by the people. Successive ministries were desirous of removing the barrier which kept the two nations jealously separate. A commission was appointed in 1657-8 to treat of mutual freedom of trade between England and Scotland, and failed, chiefly perhaps through the ignorant jealousy of the Scotch burghs, and from a natural resentment at their exclusion from trade with the English colonies.

Repeated failures to abolish duties between the two countries.

of ten hides, wet or dry, 6s. 8d.; honey, the barrel, 10s.; lead, the ton, £3; lead-ore, £1, 10s. Leather is distinguished as wild leather (deerskin), white leather, and points. Lobsters and oysters are both customed. Potatoes (now first occurring) pay 16s. the 100 pound weight at import; cattle from Ireland or England pay £1.

4s. the piece. There is a similar enumeration of drugs to that in tariff of 1612. Hawks are charged from £2, 8s. to £1. Jerfalcons hold the first rank, then 'Lenners' and 'Jerkins,' Goshawks, 'Lennerts,' and 'Tassells,' and last of all, at least lowest in value, are 'Falcons,' which are taxed at £1 a piece.

In 1670, the Government took up King James's old project for a National Union, but the commission appointed for that purpose was also ineffectual. Even after the Revolution, a new commission had no better fortune.

It is well known through what obstacles, and The Union. especially against what popular discontent, the Union was at length carried in 1707. The mutual dislike of the nations was still strong, and the Scotch aversion to any measure proposed by England was only overcome by the wholesome necessity of escaping the rigour of the Navigation laws, and of breaking through the exclusive monopoly of the English Colonial trade.

It was some time before the good effects of the Progress of Union were felt in the trade of Scotland; and even Union. down to our own day there existed some ground to complain of restrictions on manufactures and excise duties unequally applied in the two countries; but these were trifling grievances, serving only to mark the general well-being. After the political storms of the last century had passed over, and since the only mischievous remains of our feudal system were swept away by the Act abolishing Heritable Juris- 20 Geo. II. diction, Scotland has had no real cause of complaint. a.D. 1748. Her commerce, dating almost from that last legislative measure, has gone on increasing, and the country, relieved from the old fetters, has sprung forward in industry and enterprise, in wealth and cultivation, with a rapidity which I believe to be unequalled.

Before concluding, I wish to acknowledge my obligations to some kind friends who have helped me in the course of my work.

I am much obliged to Lord Dunfermline for an introduction to Mr. Ward, H.M. Chargé d'Affaires at the Hague, who was good enough to procure me information, as well as to offer me introductions that would have been invaluable if I had been able to prosecute my inquiries in Holland.

Mr. Dasent, to whom the world still looks for a version of the Orkney saga, kept me right as to the relations of his friends the Vikings with our Scotch court.

My brother Professors and friends, Sir James Y. Simpson and Dr. Douglas Maclagan, took pity upon me in my attempts to explain the long list of drugs which forms so curious a part of the tariff of 1612; I have enriched the pages of this Preface with Professor Simpson's observations; and the supplement to the Glossary, under the title 'Drugs,' will be more valued, when I state that I owe it to Professor Maclagan's active friendship. The eminence of those gentlemen in that department of science gives their exposition of the old pharmacopæia an authority which it would have wanted coming from me.

Mr. Small, librarian to the University, has assisted me during the whole progress of the work, besides taking charge of the first transcript.

Other friends have helped me, of whose friendship any man might be proud, but I beg leave to thank them without naming them. I would avoid the accusation of vanity, and the appearance of throwing upon others a responsibility which should rest upon myself.

He who suggested the work, and who assisted and counselled me till the text was printed, is gone beyond the reach of my thanks. I must not let the first of a series of Scotch Record Publications go out into the world without the name of Joseph Robertson; but this is not the place for expressing the debt which I and all historical inquirers and the country owe to him. Still less can I venture here to speak of the affectionate regard with which his friends cherish his memory.
